New Siberian Crane Sculptures Unveiled at Wishing Star Park to Celebrate World Migratory Bird Day

The new sculptures celebrate Shanghai Disney Resort's commitment to nature and enrich the lakeside getaway experience for the two hotels adjacent to Wishing Star Park

Shanghai, October 9, 2026 – On the eve of World Migratory Bird Day, Shanghai Disney Resort unveiled three Siberian crane sculptures at Wishing Star Park. Showcasing these critically endangered cranes in various stages of flight, the sculptures celebrate their beauty and resilience. By connecting Wishing Star Park with Poyang Lake, an important habitat for Siberian cranes, through the story of crane conservation, the sculptures reflect the resort's commitment to nature, adding a new point of discovery to the park and inviting guests, particularly those staying at the two lakeside hotels by Wishing Star Lake.

This morning, the “Magic Along the Flyway” Siberian Crane Sculpture Unveiling Ceremony was held at Wishing Star Park. Representatives from government, the International Crane Foundation (ICF) and nonprofit organizations, together with the crane sculptures’ artist, local school students and teachers, and Shanghai Disney Resort Cast Members, gathered at Wishing Star Park to witness the unveiling of the three sculptures.

Over the past decade, Shanghai Disney Resort has fostered a collaborative platform that brings together nonprofit organizations and community partners to raise awareness of conservation and inspire meaningful action. The collective conservation efforts by the Disney Conservation Fund (DCF) and the International Crane Foundation (ICF) have helped nearly double the Siberian crane population along the eastern flyway. By linking the resort’s Wishing Star Park, a vital wintering ground for migratory birds, with the Siberian crane habitat at Poyang Lake, a key focus of DCF and ICF's joint conservation efforts to save Siberian cranes, the sculptures invite guests to learn about crane conservation and the journeys of migratory birds.

Adjacent to both Shanghai Disneyland Hotel and the new Shanghai Disney Enchanted Star Hotel, due to open this winter, Wishing Star Park serves as a shared lakeside retreat for hotel guests. The new sculptures further enrich the park experience, inviting guests to slow down, appreciate nature and discover the resort's conservation story as part of a relaxing multi-day stay.
